M.S. PROJECT MANAGEMENT Program

The 36-semester-hour graduate program in Project Management provides you with a focused, applied and rigorous experience in creating, developing, implementing, and assessing projects and the resulting products.

Most subject matter experts do not have the necessary skills to manage and lead a project team to successfully produce a high-quality product or service on time or within budget. Contemporary project management and product development can be complex and require additional leadership, soft and technical skills to achieve success. The Master of Science degree consists of a program of courses designed to help prepare you for career advancement in the discipline of project management and for positions such as project manager, project coordinator, lead project engineer, enterprise project manager and a variety of positions associated with information technology project management.

Did you know ... College graduates entering Science, Technology, Engineering and Math (STEM) careers can expect to garner the best starting salaries, according to a 2017 study by the Hay Group division of Korn Ferry - up to 30% higher than the national average.

“ Our program is one of the largest Master of Science programs in Project Management in the world with over 1,000 full-time students. Our specialization in Cybersecurity methodologies is a unique offering critical to the project management field today.
